Subject: draft plan places profits over public health

I do not expect the superfund to restore the Portland harbor to pristine condition, but the proposed plan is unbelievably weak. Rather than being proud that you cut the cost by 50% you should be listing the public health and environmental goals the plan meets. It's an insult to the effort that Tom McCall started to make the Willamette a river Oregon can be proud of.

- Expecting nature to fix 86% of the river without intervention is a joke.
- Leaving the toxic sediment in the river is an accident waiting to happen. (What will happen when the big earthquake hits?)
- Removing the fish consumption advisory in 10-20 years is a reasonable goal. That affects people and wildlife profoundly.

Thank you,
